Where's your hairline supposed to be? It is possible for your barber to push back your hairline and they might not even understand it because they are so focused on creating a clean haircut. Or, you could even push back your own hairline trying to do your own training lines at home. So, it's your responsibility to look in the mirror and try to see if your hairline is where it should be. * A line up is intended to clean up your natural attachment removing stray hairs that could cause your attack to not look sharp, clean and clean. * You know your hair gets cut too far beyond your natural nature when it starts to grow and there are a lot of hair that should be removed to make that line clean. * A lot of hair should not be cut first. In other words, when your hairline starts to come back into your hairline... It should not appear too far from when it was initially cut. This line is perfect. In fact, her hair looks fuller after the haircut, which could be dyed, but either way... her barber made sure that her hairline was not pushed any further. In fact, it seems that he carried it forward with a little dyeing and a steady hand. In addition, there is not an extreme difference between her natural hairline and after her different training from the fact that she looks a nervousness, more often and full. This indicates that her hairline is being cut where it should be. This makes him look younger and his hair looks healthier and cleaner. This is a nice haircut but it is clear that his hairline is being pushed back. If you look closely, his forehead looks bigger because the line is pushed a little too far. Especially on the side, the barber created a very hard "C" shaped line. It doesn't seem natural for this man. Some people go specifically for this look but amazingly, his hairline will reburrow if he keeps cutting it like that. Overall, the cheater did a good job, and has a steady hand but could cause the hair removal of his client. What do I do to reverse this? Simple. Let your hairline grow in a little bit longer than usual, so the next time you go get your haircut, just say "I'm trying to grow the multiline back, could you try following my natural hairline?" It's your barber to understand. It's nothing personal. Just one small step more to save yourself from a hairline by the end of the expected, almost every black man who went to the barber experienced a barber messed up his hair.
