Most efficient xp farm minecraft 1.16

Probably the most consistent, easiest way to get a lot of XP is building an XP farm. It's a contraption that provides a constant stream of what is source of XP, in a way that is easily and safely obtainable. There are countless designs of XP farms, varying in difficulty and efficiency. I'll show a couple designs Probably the easiest in general, but with very low efficiency, is a spawner-based XP farm built around a random zombie or skeleton spawner - normally dig in the ground, consisting of a 9x9x8 chamber with the spawner 2 blocks below ceiling, water streams transporting the mobs to a drop chute where they are dropped 23 blocks down into a hole where the player can safely slash their legs and 1-hit kill them with any weapon, and with the mobs unable to get out. The player must remain at most 16 blocks from the spawner, so that it works, spawning more mobs. Pictured below - the structure of the spawner, with one side replaced with glass. Obviously, normally it's all dug, not built. The next step up is a general mob grinder. The design by Sethbling requires minimum of resources, but takes some more effort to light the caves around. See the next entry for construction details. Easier, though requiring more cheap resources is "the same except built in the sky", with the kill platform (the area where mobs drop and are slain by the player) at around 130 blocks above ground (or preferably sea, to avoid fall deaths) level, spawning platforms respectively higher. DON'T build the "cross-shaped" grinder that depends on mobs wandering around. It's an easy way to get Youtube clicks, not XP or mob drops, the efficiency of it is abysmal. The concept is based on waterlogged trapdoors periodically enabled by redstone to flush the mobs down a channel, then flushed into a 23 block deep drop chute, landing on bottom slabs on top of hoppers to collect their drops. The depicted layout assures mobs won't ever see the player, otherwise a creeper could blow the chamber up. If you're comfortable with the Nether, you can build a blaze farm instead - it grants roughly comparable amount of XP but the danger building it is quite obvious. You can build a farm similar to normal spawner farm, using lava instead of water to push blazes, no drop chute this time, because blazes float down slowly instead of falling, so you must take their full health. Linked below is an alternative using blaze pathfinding to gather them in one corner of the farm, in a small kill chamber - requiring a large area around the farm completely empty and a big clump of full solid blocks in the corner they should pathfind to. Next, probably the most practical, providing the best XP gain rate relative to effort - very efficient and easy, is EnderMINI by Gnembon, a classic - which requires access to the End though. This farm is based on the fact that the void around the central End island provides perimeter conditions - any spawns are limited to spawnable blocks you place. The farm is built at y=0, the lowest layer of the world, at least 128 blocks from the central island. As result, a small spawn platform (surrounded by leaf blocks to facilitate pack spawning) is the only area where endermen can spawn, and their spawn rates are just crazy. A nametagged endermite in a minecart placed across a 2-wide drop lined with trapdoors is everything needed to bring the endermen to the "kill hole". Double or triple carpets are used within 8 blocks from the drop chute to prevent endermen from teleporting when attacked, and the low area for the player makes him/her immune from the endermen attack. On regular vanilla servers, this type of farm produces enough XP that the production outpaces player's ability to absorb the XP orbs. After that we're going into realm of mega-builds; they are way too complex for a simple Q&A site answer, so I'll just leave the videos with short descriptions: The classic "sky donut" - a zombified piglin farm built over the Nether ceiling, design by Ilmango, has a great advantage of not requiring player interaction, while providing plenty of XP A farm with even greater XP rates (thanks to the fact that guardians drop more valuable orbs) is a guardian XP farm, requiring lots and lots of work to build though, built at an ocean monument: Let's not forget XP silos - builds based on furnaces constantly supplied with renewable fuel (e.g. bamboo) and smeltable material (kelp, cactus) so they are constantly active. Each smelted item adds a little XP that will be collected once the player manually removes a smelted item from the furnace; XP "builds up" slowly, over days, but can be "retrieved" in seconds: And I think it should be included, even though it's no longer possible in the game, but for historical reasons the most efficient, and most epic XP farm ever deserves a mention: the fully automatic ender dragon farm. Perfect way to store and bank experience in a furnace for those moments when you need to level up.
