Summer heat means increased oil production and, by extension, increased shine and lectaries, which can cause your base layer seem heavy, feeling fat and literally slipping away. The way n. 1 To avoid these inappropriate effects, it is generally lightened. Try some of these changes: Remove some layers: moisturizing cream, sunscreen, anti-aging lotion and the foundation that prevent you from looking smooth and elastic in winter most likely keep you warm and heavy in summer. Then cut some of that weight by passing to a combined product, such as a lightly colored moisturizer, SPF, anti-aging or a foundation with anti-aging nutrients and integrated humidity control. And if you can run away with some corrector DABs instead of the All-Over Foundation, do it. Add a primer - applying a face primer before the trick will help you keep everything in place once you start glistening go oil without oil - If you probably have oily skin, you probably use products without oil all year round. If you tend to dry, however, summer means a change. Your skin naturally produces more oil in the hot season, so you want to make sure you don't add any artificially. Try to switch to the versions without moisturizing oil, foundation or primer you use daily.seip-tan - consider a natural self-tanning lotion on your face to reduce the need to apply any color that, unlike an artificial tan, can Melt in the heat. Powder up - in the summer months, dust is your best friend. It absorbs oil and helps maintain an opaque finish. Switch to the powder blush rather than to the cream, and after finishing with concealer or foundation, a light coating of translucent dust over everything. With your basic level applied and set, your eyes are active for their summer makeover.
