Regular readers of my App Builder posts know how much I enjoy taking a break from my day gig as an Android enterprise app developer and playing around with the multimedia capabilities of Google's operating system. I particularly enjoy Android's animation capabilities, and getting to draw directly to the canvas object. With the release of Android 4.1 (Jelly Bean), Google did a lot of work under the hood to improve the underlying framework that drives the animation, not just in terms of speed but also in the overall smoothness and consistency of visual elements. Getting the opportunity to see the updated animation engine firsthand on my Nexus S proved a perfect excuse for me to write a bouncing ball tutorial. While I wrote this tutorial with Android 4.1 in mind, there is nothing that is 4.1 specific. Running it on an older device simply means you won't get to see the souped up Android animation engine in action. You can follow along with the step-by-step outline below, or download and import the entire project. 1. Create a new Android project in Eclipse. Target Android 1.6 or higher. Don't forget to rename the startup activity to Main.java, along with the associated layout resource. 2. Because we will be drawing the entire canvas ourselves, we will want to handle orientation ourselves as well. This is done by modifying the activity in the AndroidManifest.xml file. AndroidManifest.xml
