When it comes to toy ties with cinematographical theme, no movie will compare to Star Wars. In the nearly four decades since the first film hit theaters, almost all of the characters, vehicles and locations in the franchise have been transformed into a figure or playset, and both children's and adults have bought and continue to buy as many as they could afford. In honor of Star Wars Day, we decided to take a look at some of the figures that may have belonged to him and are now worth a fortune. To do this, we enlist the help of the man who literally wrote the book on the subject: Mark Bellomo, a toy expert, mental floss contributor and author of The Ultimate Guide to Vintage Star Wars Action Figures 1977-1985 (among many, many other books on toys). Bellomo tells mental floss that his love for the Star Wars universe began with the release of the first film in 1977; its link to the toy line started the following year when it obtained its first C-3PO figure. It is now owner of all the figures of vintages ever made, including the "impossible to find" Early Bird Certificate Package. With doubles and multiples of many figures and ensembles, Bellomo can't give an estimate of the number of pieces in his collection. Suffice it to say that there is a lot, and some were more difficult to locate than others. "It took me two years to get a sealed bag of foam 'trash' for the playset of the Space Star Of Death Station," bellomo says. "As for the crown's s jÁias, I have about 150 to 250 mint in sealed card (MOSC) Star Wars figures and a lot of theater pieces and sealed factory vehicles, most of which never reached The Ultimate Guide due to space restrictions" According to Bellomo, there is usually a spike in the prices of the Collector's Figures of The Star Wars when there is a major link of the media (new movies, cartoons, or made available on streaming platforms), but © also © in a case of limited supply and high demand; many collectors want the toys, but the number of collector figures © finite, which increases its value as a piece of art. Art. Of nominos were produced over the years (Kenner company sent about 250 million Number of Star Wars to 1985), then what happened to most of them? "Think this way," says Bellomo. "How many people think they would have bought a star from the stars in the spring of 1977 and would have it saved it in their original packaging"? The answer is: there are not many, and that is why the mint versions of the 10 toys listed below are worth a fortune for collectors. (And something to keep in mind: Although the potential profits of the sale of these numbers seem impressive, they should not be taken as a sign that we must all invest heavily in toys and wait for our dollars to multiply. "If I could leave right now and buy an action figure for $ 15, and turn in a year and sell it for $ 30, everyone would be doing this," says Bellomo. "It's often not working that way.") 1. Great size Artoo-Detoo (R2-D2) (1978) Ordering Original Retail: $ 7.99 Current Price: $ 675- $ 725 + (Cash sealed) with 7.5 inches high, this Figure with wheels had a secret compartment that opened to reveal an electronic circuit card and plans for the star of death. The value of this figure depends heavily on the color: the white plastic is usually yellow when exposed to sunlight or heat, so the more white is this 38-year-old R2 unit, more worth it. 2. Sonic Controlled Land Speeder (1978) Ordering Original Retail: $ 10.97th Current price range: $ 1000- $ 1200 + (mint in sealed box) According to Bellomo € S book, this value was based on the Speeder Terrestrial Luke led to New Hope, but there was another value, smaller, of the terrestrial speeder who was not controlled by the R2-D2 (€ Clicker) command. This version was only sold in J.C. Penney's Christmas catalogs and cost $ 10.97, which is about $ 40 when adjusted to the inflation. Pay so much for a toy in 1978 generally meant leaving the But the selected few who have remained untouched are now worth a hundred times more than the high price of a sticker. 3. 3. Controlled Jawa Sandcrawler (1979) Original retail price: $29.99Current Price range: $3000-$3200+ (Mint in sealed box) A little less terrifying than the huge Jawa sandcrawler from Star Wars, This toy is still in high demand 37 years after its release, and 39 years since the vehicle first appeared on screen in Star Wars: a new hope, bellomo says. Even your retractable parts purchased alone are valuable: stairs and elevator hatches can be found online for three times what the entire toy costs almost four © each of us. Millennium Falcon Spaceship (1979) Original retail price: $29.99Current Price range: $2800-$3200 (hortelÁE in sealed box) pieces in pieces on pieces! This playset had a number of retractable components, including weapons, a cockpit canopy windshield, a game table, landing gear, a secret compartment and a light hailing training as the only Luke uses in the film. Find all the pieces together © rare, but some vendors offer access on their own. "With most of the 80s that have a bunch of hard-to-find accessories, more money can be made sometimes by selling the toys to the fragments," bellomo says. "With some vintage toys, a accessories or accessories may be worth more money than the entire hull/hull of the vehicle." 5. Imperial All Terrain Armored Transport (AT-AT) (1981) Original retail price: $49.99Current Price range: $325-$975+ (Mint in Sealed Box) A higher AT-at was launched in 2010 with more features than its 1981 partner, but collectors still wish the original, which had a battery compartment, D clicking on weapons and posable legs. 6. Star Wars: The Empire Strikes Back Cloud City Playset (1981) Original Retail Price: $9.69CurrentS Price Range: $1200-$1550+ (Mint sealed in the box) This rare set was sold only in the 1980 sears wish book, by If your family belonged to that exclusive club, you can remember that. It came with a backdrop and four figures of action: Á~ ÁHan solo in his bespin, lobot, black and uegneught outfit.Á~ This piece is © valuable the materials used for your manufacture were not necessarily built for the last ©. "Most of the star wars exclusive toys built from clusters of births are becoming increasingly difficult to get on the second market," bellomo says. "Star Wars © a multi-generational global brand: every aficionado wants to own one of every piece of the vintage Star Wars line... The exclusive Sears Cloud City Playset is becoming harder to find in decent and more expensive conditions, ©" 7. SLAVE-1 BOBA FETT SPACESHIP (1981) Original retail price: $16.99Current price range: $975-$1100+ (boxsealed mint) This Kenner toy came with several removable pieces, including Han Solo in carbonite, a colorful canopy, stabilizer fins, and a loading ramp. Many removing parts meant a high probability of disappearing as soon as the figures were opened, which is why collectors look for sealed boxes. "If 100,000 Slave-1 toys survived the early 1980s, maybe about five to 10% of existing samples survived from 1981 to 1984 in good conditions, with intact and sharp-looking hair," bellomo says. "Maybe a quarter of these five to 10% are absolutely complete with all the respective parties. Most lack the colored canopy or side hatch or load ramp or Han Solo access in Carbonite Block" 8. STAR WARS: DROIDS CARDBACK BOBA FETT (1985) Original retail price: $2.99Current price range: $2300 to $2600 When Bellomo wrote the prices for his guide between March and May 2014, one of these hortelÁE condition figures in its original package (MOC, or "mint on card") was worth between $1250 and $1400A€plus the price has skyrocketed since then because "it was produced in a lot fewer number ones, and the art of the card is © different," he says. "Anything related to him©" Boba Fett, who was for the first time (animatedly) in The Star Wars Holiday Special in 1978. It remains one of the most popular characters in the Star Wars universe, and collectors are eager to get the Currency and black jet Imperial blaster included with this figure. 9. Star Wars: The Power of the Force Anakin Skywalker with Silver Currency (1985) Original Retail Prepare: $ 2.99Current PREPARATION BANK: $ 2600- $ 3000 The currency itself is worth $ 100 or more in terms of mint, but possessing the mint figure in the card with the silver coin can mean a much better payment day depending on the condition of the packaging. 10. Lego Star Wars Ultimate Collector Millennium Falcon (2007) Original Retail Prepare: $ 500current PREPARATION BANK: $ 2500- $ 4500 + This set of limited editions has more than 5100 pieces and included minifigated From Han, Chewie, Read, Obi-Wan and Luke. It is believed that it is the second largest set of lego of all time (behind the assembly taj mahal that was launched in 2008), it was not cheap to start, and even a version Completely built will put you back more than $ 1000 in the secondary market today. today.
