Rural sociology is the study of the behavior of people who live in places without a high concentration of population or economic activity. That is, analyzing rural sociology and explains how groups that live in different collectives are related. And it is addressed by the cultural economic political perspective, as well as the changes it resulted in a global context. The objective of rural sociology is to improve the quality of life of its inhabitants. Rural sociology has its origins, before the Second World War. However, after this, in the United States, with the birth of modernization of the sector, he has deepened in these themes. All this, starting from the differentiation of the type of society that produces at rural and urban level. This was given with Roosevelt to the presidency of that country. We remind you that in those moments of crisis it has been lived in the world precisely because of the war. It is as well as the president, he shows him's interest to solve it from this difference, and then find the answers to leave Ella. In this line, it was created in the American sociology society, a department for rural sociology. The arguments that rural sociology addresses are, in general terms the following: Agricultural and zootechical production.silvolla.The title of the earth and its political choices, as well as educational, health and health policies and how this influences society. This in order to design policies that allow to integrate technological advances into rural areas to improve their income, guarantee food production, improve efficiency in the use of natural resources and produce green energy that reduces ecological impact. Of course, sociologists play a fundamental role to perform studies. But the economists, trying to join the links of the economy with life in this type of company within globalization. Rural sociology must know how the community, its structure, the institutions that intervene in it, their culture, their costumes, their form of organization (which sometimes has a relationship with their religion), their family models, The values, the level of education, your communication, knowledge of your means and recognition of the effects of your decisions have in it. In order to carry out an urban sociology conclusions, it is based on statistical analysis, case studies, life stories, observation, investigations, social theory interviews, etc. Through it it is possible, for example, to know: socio-demographic profile What are the productive activities are there and the labor market situation in rural areas.Existence of national or international organizations that support the rural area and if These are of.
