The End

Her name was Leila.

Tequila Leila, as she was known to her friends and her clients. Tequila Leila as she was called at home and at work, in that rosewood-coloured house on a cobblestoned cul-de-sac down by the wharf, nestled between a church and a synagogue, among lamp shops and kebab shops – the street that harboured the oldest licensed brothels in Istanbul.

Still, if she were to hear you put it like that, she might take offence and playfully hurl a shoe – one of her high-heeled stilettos.

‘Is, darling, not was ... My name is Tequila Leila.’

Here you will find a full list of six names, but in this series of articles we look in more detail at each name. 10 minutes, 38 seconds in this strange world - in the first minute after the death of Tequila Leila began to weaken slowly and evenly as they left the coast. His brain cells that had hungry blood have now been completely free of oxygen. But they didn't fly. Not immediately, Leila brings every minute after death: the taste of the spicy goat goulash offered by his father to mark his long birth; Insight into the bubbling lemon and sugar baths used by women for waxing legs and men to visit the mosque; The smell of cardamom coffee, which Leila shares with a beautiful student in a mess, works. Each flare also resembles friends she has created in every important time in her life, and now she is desperately trying to find her. . . Llangollen Library Reading Group for Llangollen Library Library Reading Group is a group of hot readers who, as the name suggests, meets in the Lngolen library. See you once a month on a glass of wine to discuss the book they choose. During the wave of the late 1990s we came up with a new group of books. Everyone is welcome to join the group. Participants are retired from new mothers to truck drivers. We try to read literature, classic of each genre, popular children, one of the strengths of the group, because it violates our borders and introduces us to new authors and genres. Although perhaps the closest horror we were Frankenstein (whose book was not what I expected). We also read books in Tandem - Welsh and English, where the book is written in both languages. We are glad that we can watch the Buker Prize because it lectures on the book Extra passion. We will be able to compare what the reviewers and judges said about our book and find out if they were right. Thoughts of a book that our group liked most with words such as "Grabs" and gaps. The average result of Group 12 was 8 out of 10. High unanimity was formed in response to the first part (mind) in the first minutes after Leila's death and in the first minutes after Leila's death. Prostitute in Istanbul. We praised the vitality and beauty of writing, manipulation of smells, sounds and flavors. We felt anger at the Leila family for a peaceful settlement with the criminal and a grief for the birth of Binaz taken away from her daughter; In addition, we shared with five friends and lovers in the developing silent holy love and friendship, all of which have their own stories of oppression and repulsion. All forms of human rights are the calling of safak, and it became clear when we followed the stories of Leila and its relatives, the role of family, religion and state and fates of those who, for various reasons, will always remain human. However, we also saw the degrees of freedom that leia et al. determined as part of these restrictions. Some members of our group thought that the second part of the book (body) was less successful when Leila was no longer in their lives; Body and career in Istanbul is looking for a more suitable place to rest. However, there was a common consensus with the third Tom (soul), which was very satisfactory to the beginning. In conclusion, one of our groups is a lot of terrible things, but it didn't stick to me. In general, refreshing and highly recommended. About Book Group The Pennine Care Book Club works on Pennine Care NHS Foundation Trust. Our expert knowledge management team helped us to organize it, and our main members are employees who like to read. We meet every month, look at another book (using a fantastic lending service at Tamidas Public Library Book Club) and really appreciate the various landscape and the experience of the group. We meet at our university in health and well -being to ensure bachelor's degree. We are happy to participate in the Booker Prize for many reasons, so it's great that we have to read a new book; We are all ready for challenges and love to expand what we read, and it's great to be part of something bigger than our group. it's hard to reach a consensus. We loved the book very much and found the writing style interesting. Shafak really writes in a wonderful clever and descriptive way that attracts the reader, but maybe a little later. The book was quite easy to read and contained bright elements. In the first part, we liked to leave the usual linear structure, so that we were able to lose ourselves to peace instead of hurry. "The memory came to life, gathering the pieces of life that ends rapidly ... Time has become fluent, the rapid flow of memories came together, the past and now cannot be separated." Events are very touching, sometimes painful, but not exclusively. So it wasn't a miserable reading and finally left the reader supreme and thoughtful. Although it is not open to all readers, Leila is interested in friendly, optimistic and excluded to society: brother, husband, a wide range of friends, and even a cat. Love spreading from these characters is a discreet but strong love. While some readers used Dawn to create a dominant socio-political interpretation on Turkey, which has lost its existence, others thought that the "message" was not politically so strong and the characters, plot and themes could enjoy more. . Feminism, family, friendship and society. The book sometimes reads like a series of short stories that disturb some, but for a more satisfactory plot development, they are connected to each other. Some of our readers liked, some did not like, some did not care. This book is not an automatic advice for us, but we enjoyed the live and fun discussion.
